nothing more than their usual hunting apparel, boots and hats included. Today, more and more field trialers wear riding helmets and riding boots for safety.

It's hard to walk behind a horseback "gallery," but it can be done if conditions are dry and the brace you're watching isn't a "barnburner." Rugged hiking boots are important, and, as anyone in the East knows, tick repellent, liberally applied to both skin and apparel, is part of everyday hiking in fields and woods. Because many courses loop around the field trial areas, you can often see quite a bit of the trial through field glasses once you figure out where on the perimeter you should stand.

Trialers are generous folks who love to talk about their canines, and the traditional "happy hours" or club dinners on Saturday nights are ideal for meeting them and talking "dogs." Incidentally, trials take place rain or shine!

The best local opportunity to see a trial is to come to the Sarnoff area off Route 104 in Southampton where the Long Island Pointing Dog Field Trial Club is holding an AKC-licensed weekend trial on May 1 and 2. For trial details and a sample premium, contact the trial secretary, Patricia Amato, at PRAmato@aol.com, or 722-3832 before 10 p.m.
